not, and among this latter class be pleased to consider us.

There seems to be a very great error in the minds of many with regard to this question of naturalization, and it is more than probable that our Iriend of the Republican, who has but recently mounted the tripod, has fallen into it. That error consists in supposing that the right of suffrage is necessarily dependant upon naturalization. This is not so. For example, Congress may extend the term of probation to treenty-one years before the man can become a citizen, and yet during all this time he may be voting for all the offices of the country, from President down. The reason is obvious. Congress alone has the power to regulate the time and mode of maturalization the States alone have the power to prescribe the qualification of vaters. Hence the laws conferring citizenship are uniform throughout the whole country, while the laws conferring the right of suffrage are different in different States and Territories.

If, then, it be true that the right of suffrage is not dependent upon citizenship, why should the term of probation be extended? What can be effected by it, except to withhold from them the enjoyment of certain civil rights, such as serving on juries, alienating property, and claiming the protection of our flag, into whatsoever country they may choose to travel? And who is it that desires to withhold from them the enjoyment of these rights for a period of twenty-one years? We certainly do not.

The only way to stop this voting on the part of sime is may be voting for all the offices of the country, Ying Heresitent down. The reason is to come with the residual property of the control of voters. Hence the laws conferring citizenship are uniform throughout the whole country, which is the conferring the right of suffrage are different in different returns. States and Territories. Garges in the first of the f

This, according to his own mode of reasoning, was just as great an outrage upon his individual rights, as if he had been required to remain here twenty-one years. There is no different e in the principle, one years. There is no difference in the principle, says he. It is only a question of policy.

We have taken the liberty of making these suggestions, not for the purpose of exciting controversy on the question moted, but simply because, as a member of the American party, we do not wish to be committed to a pulpable absurdity. We hope the Grand Secretary of the order in Indiana will so far modify his remarks, that he may be understood asgiving expression to his own judividual views—that in this matter he speaks for Limself, as not as the organ of the American party.

We often hear members of the Know-Nothing organization declare that were Hnnry Clay, the great apostle of Whiggery, how in the political arena, he would support the narrow, illiberal, and bigoted doctrines of Know-Nothingism.

A high regard for the illustrious dead, and a desire to shield his memory from so odious an accusation, impelled me to publish to the world the extracts which I quote helbw.
